The great majority of M.B.A. students at the Stillman School of Business work full time. They're learning about business in the classrooms while practicing it in the workplace. The Stillman School faculty members changed their curriculum to match the needs and experience of their students. They didn't make it easier for them, they made it faster ... 42 credits instead of the usual 60 ... 18 months instead of almost two years. They didn't eliminate any essential courses. They eliminated redundancy. Their streamlined program combines courses that overlap, not only reducing duplication, but helping students gain a better understanding of each course.

They call their program "The Practical MBA."

Highly accredited. Completely accepted. Totally practical.

Seasoned managers may be eligible for a GMAT waiver.
