

American College of Healthcare Executives: Congress on Healthcare Leadership

Introduction

Every year in March, American College of Healthcare Executives holds a four day Congress in Chicago. The Congress offers the chance to attend a variety of seminars and learn from healthcare experts. There were more than 4,000 healthcare executives that attended this year. These seminars allow students to learn about career development skills and chance to expand their professional network. For the past two years, Seton Hall's MHA program has provided five students scholarships to attend the Congress.

Seton Hall University MHA Competencies

Leadership

Communication

Management

Critical Thinking

Political & Community
Development

Professionalism & Ethics

The diagrams created here were by using information presented at the 2017 ACHE Congress on Healthcare Leadership.

Bhavana Kolli

Tools for a Young Professional

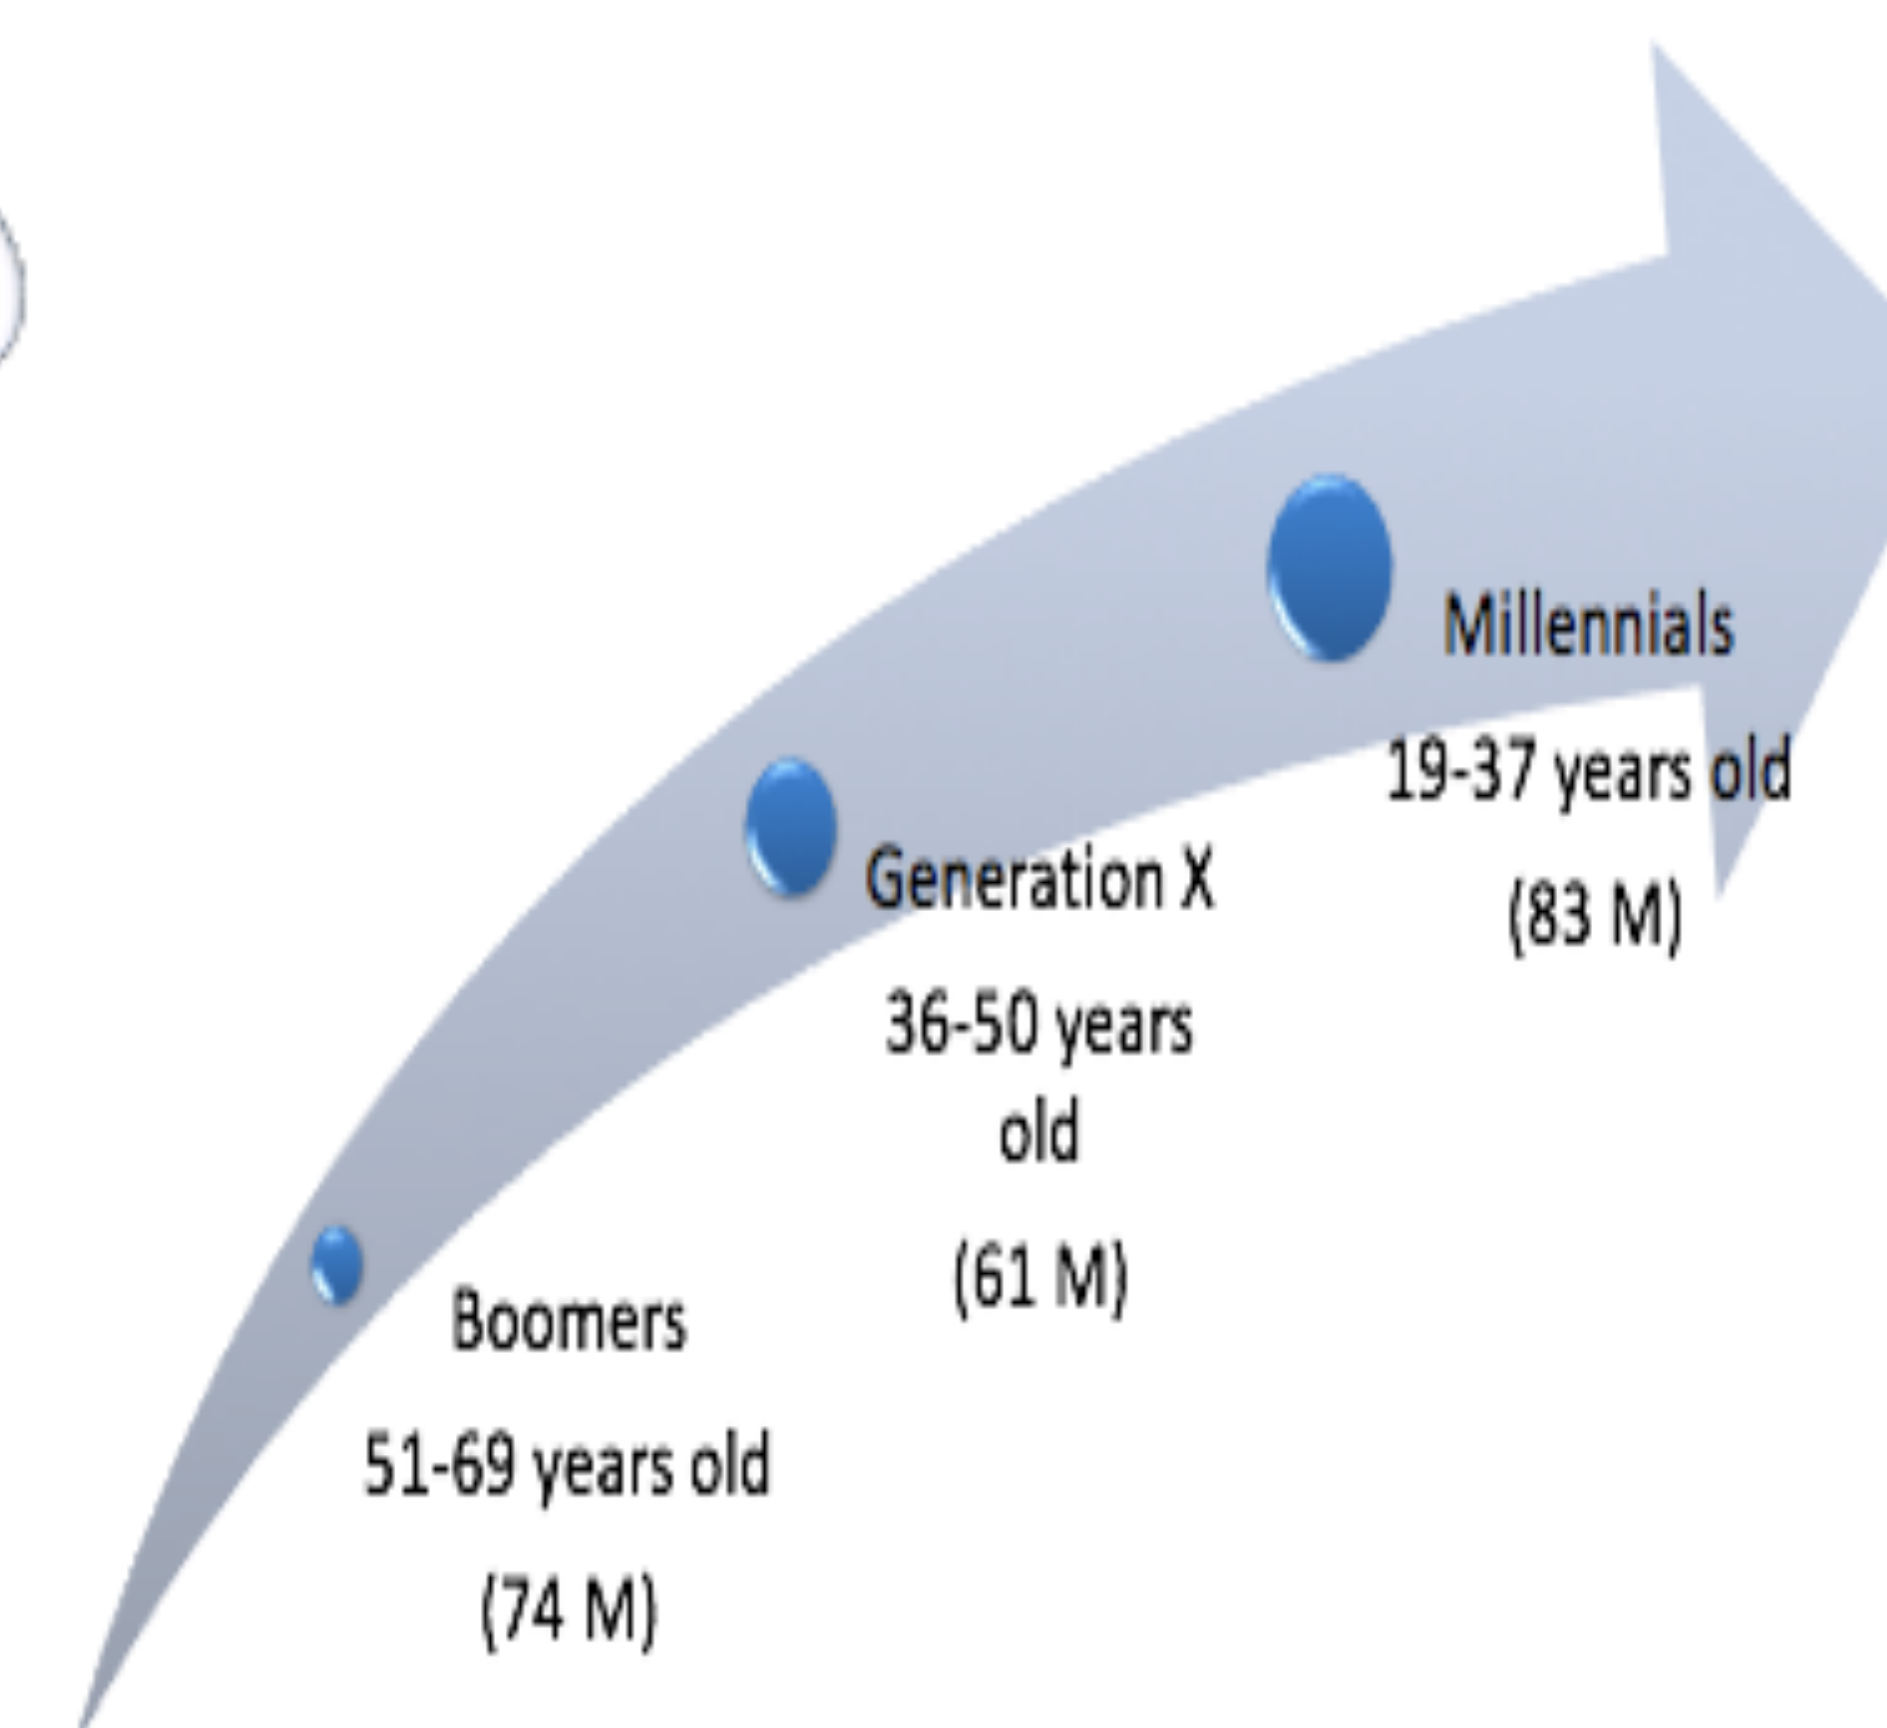

Job Interviewing Skills

Seminars at Congress

Generational Population

Professional Development

The seminars at the ACHE Congress were designed to help students transition from student to executive. Each seminar was taught by professionals in the health care field. The professionals spoke about their own experience and the lessons they learned when developing into an executive. They represented what many students aspire to be. It is crucial that students take what they have learned from these seminars and apply it to help them succeed in their career goals.

Summary

The ACHE Congress provided many opportunities such as:

- Information about future fellowships
 - Leadership pointers to communicate with all ages
 - Take aspects that were taught in the classroom and show how they are applied in the field
 - Networking opportunities to meet other MHA students and CEOs
 - Received inspirational advice and lessons
- ACHE Congress was a crucial learning experience to help students to grow into future healthcare leaders.