Professor: Reverend Christopher M. Ciccarino, S.S.L., S.T.D.

This course will serve as an introduction to the New Testament letters of St. Paul. After a brief introduction to the life and world of the apostle, each of his letters will be considered. Particular attention will be paid to the historical and cultural contexts of his congregations, as well as the literary and rhetorical strategies Paul employs in his correspondence. In this way we will come to understand the fundamentals of both Paul's theology (what God has done in Christ) and pastoral vision (how Christians are to respond).

Reverend Christopher Ciccarino, S.S.L., S.T.D., Associate Dean and Assistant Professor of Biblical Studies, completed an S.T.B. at the Pontifical Gregorian University and was appointed by Archbishop John Myers to the faculty of Immaculate Conception Seminary. Father Ciccarino then returned to Rome to further his studies and completed an S.S.L. at the Pontifical Biblical Institute and an S.T.D. at the Pontifical Gregorian University.

Professor: David Hyman, M.A.
Visiting Lecturer

What were the circumstances that have made the biblical land of Israel the stage for some of the most dramatic and influential events of world history and faith? In three parts, this course will aim to provide a better understanding of this region during the first century BC and AD. First, it will examine the region, the land and the landscape. Second, it will explore the social and political interactions among the many different inhabitants who shared the land. Third, it will examine the culture, the customs, the ways of worship and the daily life of the local communities, with an emphasis on the Jewish/Judean community.

David Hyman, M.A., visiting lecturer from Israel, completed his B.A. in Archaeology at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, earned his M.A. in Geography and Tourism from Haifa University and is a licensed independent tour guide and educator of the Israeli Ministry of Tourism. Professor Hyman served as a paratrooper and officer in the Israeli Defense Forces and reached the position of Company Commander. Currently, he holds the rank of Major (Res).
