Discrimination and Harassment Prevention
for Higher Education
On-line Training

All new employees and faculty members (full and part-time) are required to complete this on-line course within thirty (30) days of receipt of the registration e-mail from Everfi, the University's vendor who administers the training. In order to access the training through the portal, you will need to input your last name and your Employee ID number.

This course outlines all of the different types of discrimination and harassment protected under federal law in the workplace and academic environment-differential treatment based upon someone's membership in a protected class (e.g. age, disability, national origin, race, gender, sexual orientation, religion, etc.). Conduct of this nature violates the Seton Hall University mission and its core values. This course also includes information on university policy, procedures and reporting protocols.

Seton Hall University strives to maintain a safe and professional work, academic and residential living environment that is free from harassment, discrimination and retaliation.

Problems accessing or navigating through the course should be reported to the Technology Service Desk via email at servicedesk@shu.edu or by calling (973) 275-2222.
