Professional Background

Since 2013, Grace has been a professional certified coach (PCC) and works with clients who are expanding their leadership capacities in both professional roles and personal goals. With twenty years in health care as an RN, Grace is well versed in the medical industry but also has experience in technology, government and non-profit organizations.

Grace has been successful with coaching leaders to overcome imposter syndrome and rely on their knowledge and communication skills for optimal success in their roles. She has worked with clients in higher education, finance, engineering, operations, health care, technology and students in STEM concentrations, helping many to clarify their personal vision and values and well as increase confidence and authenticity.

Grace works solely with university contracts. She facilitates leadership education through 1:1 and group coaching with students, faculty, staff and post graduate executive program participants. She specializes in strengths-based leadership and emotional intelligence with a focus on supporting clients to level-up their goals and performance. Her coaching services are typically in collaboration with university-based leadership programs that utilize individual assessments and 360s.
