This course is designed to impart an understanding of how to do business in or with India and the regions surrounding it. It includes a visit to India to gain firsthand experience of its cultural, social, industrial, business and financial centers. Students are also exposed to questions related to human growth and development from the ancient times and pertaining to peaceful coexistence as a large religiously and ethnically diverse population. The course combines attending classes at Seton Hall and Indian universities, lectures at business houses, and interactions with general population. It is approved to fulfill requirements for Signature 3 Core (CORE 3028) and Global Business (BINT 3001) courses by doing some additional work. The course is open to all Seton Hall University students, graduate and undergraduate.

Students attend 3 classes at Seton Hall on Indian economy, society and culture. They are prepared for the trip. They also attend classes at universities in India, visit businesses, ancient/historic sites, and interact with academics, business and social leaders, representatives of industries, and government officials. Students will be required to maintain a journal of their travel through India and write a term paper based on the journal with some theme selected by the student. In addition, graduate students write an in-depth paper on any business, economic, or societal sector of India. The topic may be changed with instructor's approval. The travel to India takes place during Spring Break.

This is one of the International Business courses in the School of Business curricula. The course is open to all Seton Hall students enrolled in any undergraduate or graduate program. The course has been offered since 2009 and is ready to make its 12th trip to India during the Spring Break 2020. Students from various units of SHU, such as Business, A&S, and Diplomacy, have travelled to India and experienced Indian social, cultural, political, and economic subsystems. Because this course “engages the world,” it is approved as a Seton Hall University Core Curriculum Signature 3 Course, CORE 3028. This will require additional reading on spiritualism involving Hindu and Catholic thoughts, writing a report, and making a presentation. The course is also approved as a substitute of Global Business (BINT 3001) requirement. For the latter, students will write a paper on doing business in India for Professor Larry McCarthy.
