

Launch a Great Future in the Humanities

At Seton Hall, you'll be part of a community of great minds that understands how a well-rounded liberal arts education can translate into career success. We offer programs in English, History, Liberal Studies, Classical Studies, Philosophy and Creative Writing — each with valuable, hands-on learning opportunities starting as early as freshman year. Plus, you'll transform into a skilled public speaker, writer and critical thinker, preparing you for whatever career path you decide to take.

To enhance your education, you can write for Chavez, the student literary magazine, or The Setonian, our award-winning student newspaper. There are also opportunities to listen to world-renowned writers like Toni Morrison and Azar Nafisi, attend lectures at our Edwin R. Lewinson Center for the Study of Labor, Inequality and Social Justice, and work on career-relevant projects alongside your professors. What's more, study abroad programs are available in China, France, Italy, Russia and many other countries.

As a top five university for undergraduate internships, Seton Hall is also the ideal place to put your knowledge to the test in the real world. ABC, American Cancer Society, The Clinton Foundation, ESPN, Google, MTV and the United Nations are just a few of the employers that have offered our students internships.

The advantages of Seton Hall don't end there. You'll also benefit from small classes and Fulbright-scholar faculty, as well as a fun, close-knit and values-driven community where everyone wants to see you succeed.

With opportunities like these, great minds like you can accomplish anything.

"The leadership opportunities I received from Seton Hall transformed my life.

As a freshman and sophomore, I learned firsthand about leadership while working as a congressional intern on Capitol Hill. I got an inside look at how the legislative process works, and I'll remember that experience for the rest of my life."
